News

- Japan's parliament passed a law that will provide free COVID-19 vaccines to residents. The law allows a person to refuse vaccination, especially if the efficacy or safety of the drug is insufficiently proven at the time of approval. The government will shoulder medical expenses and disability pensions if the vaccine causes serious side effects.
- Russia President Putin has ordered authorities to begin the process for mass vaccinations of its Sputnik V vaccine, beginning next week. Teachers and health workers will be the first to receive the shots of the vaccine, which will still be administered on a voluntary basis.
- China is implementing sweeping inspections of food importers, supermarkets, e-commerce platforms, and restaurants to prevent the transmission of the virus through imports of cold products. The State Administration for Market Regulation warned that the risk of virus transmission through cold chain imports are continuously increasing.
- The United Kingdom yesterday granted emergency use authorization to the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine. The vaccine rollout will be in phases, and will first be offered starting next week to the elderly above 80 and care home staff, through 50 "hospital hubs." Thereafter, doctors' offices will reportedly start operating local vaccine centres.
