News

- Vaccine manufacturers BioNTech and Pfizer yesterday started the "rolling submission" of their vaccine candidate's results to the European Medicines Agency (EMA). This is the second vaccine under the EMA's accelerated review process. With rolling reviews, the EMA starts to assess the data even before all evidence are submitted, speeding up the process. The rolling review process for competitor AstraZeneca's vaccine begun six days ago.
- The head of the World Health Organization yesterday said that a vaccine against COVID-19 may be ready by the end of this year. At least nine potential vaccines are in the list of the WHO's COVAX facility, which aims to distribute 2 billion doses of vaccine to low- and middle-income economies by the end of 2021.
- The United States' Food and Drug Administration, with its new rules announced yesterday, is now requiring at least two months of safety data from all vaccine manufacturers, if they are aiming to receive emergency use authorisation. This suggests that any US vaccine for distribution will only be available after the November 2020 elections.
