News

- Two of Europe's biggest economies will return to a partial lockdown. In France, a four-week lockdown will begin on Friday, closing bars, restaurants, non-essential retailers and requiring people to stay home except for essential activities. Germany will impose a partial lockdown until end-November from Monday onwards with similar restrictions. Notably, schools will remain open and retailers will be allowed to stay open amid strict access limits.
- Singapore will ease some restrictions for its foreign worker dormitory residents, which were largely confined to their dorms since April as a large wave of infections spread through the dorms. Migrant workers who test negative for the virus will now be allowed to visit recreation centers to shop for groceries, remit money, get a haircut and dine with others.
- Lao PDR will allow fast-track entry for visitors from China from Sunday onwards, and from Vietnam a week later. Travellers will have to follow certain precautions, including a negative Covid-19 test. The opening is unilateral as Lao nationals continue to not be allowed to leave the country, though with some exceptions.
